

ABSTRACT

A hardware device having software installed in a personal computer converting analog voice information to digital voice and connecting a cordless telephone or regular telephone to a personal computer routed through the Internet via Internet Protocol addressing. Calls may be placed via the linked Internet chat cord invention using a cordless telephone or a regular phone and through a personal computer connected to the Internet. Calls may be received via the Internet to a personal computer and then to a cordless or regular phone via Voice over Internet Protocol using the Internet chat cord. Telephone conversations may also be placed to more than one personal computer and / or PSTN telephone at the same time providing conferencing.